Ps – Check out the following songs that may not be appropriate for just3ants

The Rifle- Alela Diane

Tyko – The Books [Marie says, “This is one really out there. It is beautiful. The instruments..]

My mom man – Feist

Knife –Grizzly Bear

Marie just mentioning that we are now listening to Modest Mouse, pretty cool. Now my very cool wife while dancing around the kitchen is mentioning Radio Head but they might be “too mainstream” but they are now producing their music over the Internet where they are saying, “pay what you can afford” even if its only one cent.

Earlier MdG mentioned there is a song that talks to “Velcro shoes that flies to the sun” – this is the type of music that is for those “off the mainstream, not into designer jeans, but they have money to go to university but they don’t want to fit into the mold of their previous generation; they think they are more evolved and they do random acts of kindness. They are not revolutionaries, they travel, they have some information, they know enough that the system is corrupt, not wanting to follow in the same footsteps but at the same time they don’t have a voice. They have some neat experiences but doubtful they can survive without their trust funds, not in this society unless they move and then who in foreign lands would want them once better informed of those with their random acts of kindness but stopping at the point that it interferes with their gravy train.

Ps II – Perhaps the $ Hit List should be alphabetical.
