Dave, what caught my attention in everything you wrote Adam L. Tucker was in reference to me,

"To me, what you are doing is the equivalent of voting for Ralph Nader...it sends a message, but functionally helps no one. People can believe in him all they want, but they are throwing away their vote when they vote for him"

I will, in about 60 seconds, carbon copy on what I just sent Leonard Joffe, another "nobody" such as yourself, using another email account.

In the meantime you can view the identical email by clicking the hyperlink below:

<http://www.nextraterrestrial.com/pdf/Microsoft%20Word%20-%20ljoffe-cover.pdf>

You should be able to see who else is receiving a copy but you don't know who isn't.

What do you think?

Gary

Ps – My stepfather, Alan Zulman one of the first and youngest "self-made" multi-millionaires in South Africa was also the most successful fund raiser for the State of Israel; not to mention that South Africans Jewish people, per capita, were the largest contributors to Israel ever since its formation in 1948.

Alan would approach the wealthiest in the heavily corrupt Durban, Jewish community and present his balance sheet all the while contributing a very large junk of his own net worth which served rather well to embarrass these good-for-nothing selfish bastard Jewish people stealing blind from the majority of the enslaved Black South African population.

As you have now figured out I have taken a slightly different approach knowing that the overwhelming majority of the world's wealth in private hands has been stolen using the barrel of a gun and those in the public trust such as university endowments, and other such nonsense charities including of course political parties do nothing more than assuage the guilt of those who have stolen the most all the while providing the hard working poor who haven't yet figured out how to "steal legally" a rather obscene false sense of security that there are actually good people out there working like dogs for these good for nothing charities that are all designed to allow the filthy rich to keep trickling down the cost of getting rich on to the backs of the poor who are not stupid, simply very misinformed.

Again, thank you ever so much for increasing the circle of those dependent upon my insight and analysis of the important events of the day. Keep it up!

PS I – In the event you are too numb to figure it out, and remember you are not alone, just ask Dr. John K. Pollard Jr. an alumnus of MIT and Cornell University who educate the most average at our schools who rise to the top of the Bell Shaped Curve making them all that much more perfect mediocre, once you realize that not only "in war money is no object" but how very easy it was for Hitler to get his diamonds to produce precision tooling to make his most extraordinary military machine but diamonds are currency that can be used as both a means of exchange as well as collateral to buy goods and services and the such as well as of course to barter for stuff like oil and the such, then if you are say the Mossad, with the most wired as well as deadly assassination's unit who don't need to report either to the US Congress or the FBI or the CIA, then you too don't need those utterly worthless South African Rands that my stepfather so painstakingly went about raising from the most corrupt of the Durban, South African Jewish community and who when visiting with Israel were treated just like my step-father as "royalty", getting their picture taken with none other than David Ben Gurion who thought they were all imbeciles as well as corrupt, which they were.

Dave,

When I first moved back to San Diego I stayed at Gary's home near Julian; I had a computer with internet connection but no television. I was surfing the internet one day and found a video online about Kabala. There were a few things that stood out to me; they explored the idea of free will and said that they believe the only true form of free will is out decision to choose our environment and the people that we share it with. The also explored levels of enlightenment; they said the first level operates on instinct and the desire to fulfill ones basic needs. I don't remember if there were 3 or 4 levels but my understanding is that most eastern religions believe in the concept of levels of consciousness... any way, the next level is where most people live, it is based upon fulfilling selfish needs but doing it under the guise of helping others... i.e. I give you a present or help you because it makes me feel good. The person in the highest level of consciousness operates with no thought for him or herself and when doing well for others there is no unconscious expectation to get something in return. The final thing that I took from the online video was their view on the effects of selfishness; they used a cancer cell and the human body for an analogy... A cancer cell is a normal cell that operates in the body only for itself which is counter to its intended role in contributing to the greater good. The body can exist with some cancer cells, but as the cancer cells grow in numbers it begins to stop the bodies intended processes and the host dies.

You mentioned in a previous email that you have gone on church retreats with your father; was this done to increase your "sphere of influence", or do you believe in G-d or design of any kind?

I started reading a biography called Einstein: His Life and Universe; prior to reading Einstein's view on religion I would have considered myself an agnostic, but once I saw the bible as a history book that described how to live a balanced life and everything clicked. I don't believe in organized religion as I don't think it is necessary to go to a church or temple to appreciate design but I also don't need organized religion to appreciate the patterns and design in life.

You do not know me anymore nor can you speak for the nearly 7 billion others out there, and you are not G-d. I can only speak for myself, but I make a strong effort to confront the evils in my world. I don't expect that you will understand my decisions nor do I care how you decide to live your life.

Do you understand what $e=mc^2$ means? It is a mathematical formula for proving that energy and matter are one interchangeable; Newton proved that energy can never be destroyed, so if one combines Einstein and Newton's discoveries; one realizes that energy and matter are never destroyed. Logically this proves reincarnation exists on basic fundamental levels.

Now look at people around you including yourself. Do you see different degrees of awareness and quality of character? How do you think that a person becomes a better person?

"We put on our blinders, go to work, have families and try to live happy lives. Focusing on all the bad stuff going on in the world can do zero good for anyone. If you have the power to have some influence and make a change, then awesome...go for it...but those people are few and far between...so if you don't have that influence then don't waste your time."

What you wrote above speaks of Americans, but that only represents 4.2% of the world's population. You may say, who cares about the rest of the world, I am here and they are there... the problem with this logic is the growth of technology and the spread of information is not limited to what we see here in the US.

Lets explore something... though the US represents a small fraction of the world's population; we consume nearly 25% of the world's oil production. It doesn't take someone as "sharp" as me to figure out that oil is our Achilles heal. What would happen to our economy/society if Al Qaeda, Hezbollah, or even Israel were to destroy or take control of any or all of the oil fields in Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, or Qatar... or better yet what if a terrorist decided to make a jihad while aboard one of our defenseless supertankers traveling in international waters?

You remember what happened to the cost of concrete when supply dwindled... it went up 15% in a matter of weeks. Now apply supply and demand to oil and a dependant economy and world power that claims its power from a military that requires LOTS of oil to operate (nearly 80% of the cost of war is oil). How long do you think our military will last without oil or better yet when they learn that they have been fighting and dying for others to get rich and so that we can get cheap goods?

So getting back to what you wrote above, and revisiting the last question of my previous email...

“What do you think will happen to a money culture that has no money?”

Surely you know that emails are admissible as evidence in a court of law; it is important to be aware of what you put in writing especially when considering that it is a record of who knew what and when.

“I actually have a theory about your involvement with Gary. It's just my theory based on what I've seen and read and from what you've told me. so I may be completely wrong. I actually believe you are involved in your movement solely to make yourself feel better about yourself. Your whole family's "ranking system" was money based, so you based your success and value on your money and when the business went belly-up so did your opinion of your value. You latched on to a cause that helped you regain your value. I get that...I just think that if you are going to join a cause you should join one that will do something. To me, what you are doing is the equivalent of voting for Ralph Nader...it sends a message, but functionally helps no one. People can believe in him all they want, but they are throwing away their vote when they vote for him.”

You are partly correct, my whole family based their value system on money, but I don't think that my family is unique. The reality of your theory stops with your superficial view of the events.

The following is an excerpt from an email that I recently sent my mom.

“You are a product of your environment and the people that you chose to share it with. If Gary or Papa were murderers it would have been more black and white for you, but instead they are simply selfish and dishonest which is more widely accepted. I spent the better part of my life kissing the asses of people for what I felt was my survival. I spent so much time mentally doing what I thought other people wanted for me that I never stopped to allow myself to get to know what I want or who I am. I was in a state of constant confliction, knowing what was right, but putting up with people that I knew were wrong and agreeing with their lies for the sake of self-preservation.”

The following is an excerpt from an email that I recently sent Gary Hoffman.

“We have not spoken since that phone call in July or August of 2007 during which you decided to show your cards to me upon hearing that my mother and father had been helping me financially with my business and realized that you no longer had that edge over them which was followed by a short pause of silence on your part followed by you reminding me of the money that you had let me barrow and telling me, “guess what? It is a gift. Have a nice life.”

To your credit you didn't hang up the phone which with you exposed, allowed me the freedom to ask questions that I had wanted to ask but hadn't for concern of biting the hand that fed me."

Once I was honest about myself and my family, it made it clear to me that money is not a healthy finish line. All of my family is rich financially but without their money they are naked and have nothing. What does a money culture do when it has not money?

What is your value system based upon since it is clearly not being selfless or helping others?

I am filing bankruptcy and in doing so I am working within the US legal system to correct my failure as a business person.

Adam,

As far as being selfish, everyone I've ever known has been selfish. The only difference between people is how obvious they are about making their self interests their #1 priority. That was one of the key points in that video you had me watch. People are selfish. I just admit who I am. You are just as selfish. Please don't try to say otherwise.

As far as the rest of what you said, well, it really doesn't answer my questions. You basically said you have found out what is right and wrong and are now able to confront what you know is wrong. If you aren't changing other people's opinions and actions with that knowledge then you might as well stand in the desert by yourself yelling that you know what's right and what's wrong. My point is that you are not accomplishing anything more than making yourself feel better about yourself. What is your sphere of influence? Who are you convincing? And even if you convince people to join your cause, what does that mean? What changes, best case scenario...and I mean ridiculous, best case scenario...could really happen? A small group of people change their minds...and???

We all know there are evils in this world....and we all purposely ignore them to live sane lives. We know people are being killed all over the world for political gain. We know that our government has put out hits on individuals. We know that a lot of terrible things are going on...and we also know that if we focus on those issues we'll go nuts and we'll lead miserable lives. You can focus on more positive things in life or you can focus on the negatives that you can't change...I see no point in doing the latter. We put on our blinders, go to work, have families and try to live happy lives. Focusing on all the bad stuff going on in the world can do zero good for anyone. If you have the power to have some influence and make a change, then awesome...go for it...but those people are few and far between...so if you don't have that influence then don't waste your time.

I just think you should focus your energy on something that will actually help people instead of just making you feel better about yourself. Go volunteer at a homeless shelter. Join an established group (a grassroots organization) that is big enough to get something done. Do something that does more than just pass information on to people that don't want to hear it.

As far as intelligence, not it is not necessary for deciding right from wrong. It is, however, useful in deciding how best to manage your time and actions. If influencing people is not a goal, then having a website is not an intelligent choice. If influencing people is a goal, then there should be a focus on increasing your sphere of influence, not decreasing it. From what I've seen so far, influencing people to change their minds about your ideas is clearly not a goal. Intelligence is useful in saying "I'm not influencing anyone here, maybe I should re-think my actions". You said this is not about convincing anyone of anything. Well, then your job is done. I know you're a sharp guy, so I know you understand what I'm saying.

I actually have a theory about your involvement with Gary. It's just my theory based on what I've seen and read and from what you've told me. so I may be completely wrong. I actually believe you are involved in your movement solely to make yourself feel better about yourself. Your whole family's "ranking system" was money based, so you based your success and value on your money and when the business went belly-up so did your opinion of your value. You latched on to a cause that helped you regain your value. I get that...I just think that if you are going to join a cause you should join one that will do something. To me, what you are doing is the equivalent of voting for Ralph Nader...it sends a message, but functionally helps no one. People can believe in him all they want, but they are throwing away their vote when they vote for him.

As far as throwing money at problems, sometimes you have to do just that. Bills are a problem that you have to throw money at. As far as right and wrong, it is not right that I am paying someone else's bills. I'm paying them because it negatively affects me if I don't (that whole selfish thing again). If right and wrong are now really your main focus, then prove it by doing something tangible...paying your bill.

Dave

Dave,

I learned from the downfall of the construction company that one can't throw money at a problem; if one wants to make a change it is just that simple. The more I look for patterns in nature, business, people, etc., the more I realize that in the least there is a consistency of order.

Have you ever thought about what grassroots organizations would do if there wasn't human suffering to rally around?

Have you ever asked yourself what weapons manufacturers do during times of peace?

When you were driving in the car with Megan many years ago and the oil pan from a car in front of you flew into your windshield, did you ever think about the idea that your world changed the moment it detached from its vehicle. The idea that something isn't until it is.

If you look at life as a series of challenges, and can be honest with yourself, you start to see the pervasiveness of complacency and then one begins to see the cumulative affects.

One has to ask how long does anything last? And more importantly where do you want to stand as things change?

"Now, I do have a question about your overall goals with the website and other items you are working on: What tangible goal are you trying to accomplish? I assume that, at a basic level, you are trying to make a positive difference. What difference though? Are you trying to just change people's attitudes? Are you trying to save lives? I'm not sure I see what reasonable effects you guys can possibly have on the world. Is changing 2-3 people's opinions worth this effort? Even if 2-3 people do change their minds and agree with you... what does that accomplish? They then hate the government, monopolies and don't buy diamonds? On a big scale that amounts to nothing. You have to realize you aren't going to change the government or any monopolies or save anyone's lives. There are lots of other things you could do that would have a much larger effect on a much larger group of people. Following a guy who is leading a 2 man charge against very powerful groups seems like a waste of time. I know you're smart enough to do that math, so I don't understand your involvement in this crusade."

Do you think that intelligence is a variable when determining right from wrong?

Life is a series of tests and challenges. It is my choice how I face the challenges but each challenge overcome makes us stronger and arguably better. It is my choice to decide what is right and what is wrong, and then once I have made that decision it is again my choice to decide to confront what I know is wrong or ignore it.

This is not about convincing anyone of anything; truth is a constant and stands on its own. The website is just intended to share information; it then becomes someone else's responsibility to use the information to make educated decisions; selfish or selfless. People will choose their distractions and there are plenty of them, if a person chooses to ignore what they know to be wrong that is their choice and their life to live.

History has always been written by the people in power. Which is why this is such an exciting time. Never before has there been a medium for exchanging information around the world such as the internet. Most take it for granted that the answers to most any questions are out there, they just have to want to see it; whether people look for answers is not for me to decide.

How much time would you say that we have before the poor on the other end of the bell shaped curve that afford you the option to "drive where ever you want" or "make as much or as little money as you want, wake up and realize how they have been manipulated?"

What do you think will happen to a money culture that has no money?

Adam

P.S. Considering how I exposed my family on the website for being hypocrites, dishonest, and amoral; I am surprised that you would be so forthright in proclaiming who you are.

"Hell, I'm pretty selfish and don't care that much about other people..."

As much as I respect your honesty, I do not respect someone that is selfish with their eyes wide open.

Hey man,

Your links didn't work, but I was able to find and watch all 6 portions of The Trap. Interesting, but it didn't get me all worked up or anything. I think it's obvious that people act in their own self interests. I think everyone realizes that freedom is not actually complete freedom. I think we all know that most people aren't mentally stable... hell, almost everyone I know is diagnosed with ADD or ADHD. I think we all know that governments aren't exactly looking out for the individual's best interests. To me, all high level politicians are shady as hell. Government involvement in our lives is a pain in the ass. The IRS, DMV and every other 3 letter organization that costs us money in taxes, but really don't do much for us... they are a pain in the ass... if you let them be. You can focus on the problems or you can focus on the freedoms we do have. I can start a business. I can drive wherever I want. I can make as much or as little money as I want. I can talk to whomever I want. I can do whatever I want, within the very broad confines of our legal system. Things aren't perfect, systems aren't perfect and governments aren't perfect, but what we do have is pretty damn good.

I may not like everything our country stands for or does, but I wouldn't choose to be under any different system in the world.

Now, I do have a question about your overall goals with the website and other items you are working on: What tangible goal are you trying to accomplish? I assume that, at a basic level, you are trying to make a positive difference. What difference though? Are you trying to just change people's attitudes? Are you trying to save lives? I'm not sure I see what reasonable effects you guys can possibly have on the world. Is changing 2-3 people's opinions worth this effort? Even if 2-3 people do change their minds and agree with you... what does that accomplish? They then hate the government, monopolies and don't buy diamonds? On a big scale that amounts to nothing. You have to realize you aren't going to change the government or any monopolies or save anyone's lives. There are lots of other things you could do that would have a much larger effect on a much larger group of people. Following a guy who is leading a 2 man charge against very powerful groups seems like a waste of time. I know you're smart enough to do that math, so I don't understand your involvement in this crusade.

Hell, I'm pretty selfish and don't care that much about other people, but just in my business alone I've helped or seen about 25 people overcome severe medical issues. I'll take changing people's health and quality of life over changing 2-3 people's political opinions. Does what I'm saying make sense? I think it's awesome that you want to make a difference... I just think you should put your effort into something that will actually make a difference.

Let me know what you think,

Dave

Adam,

Okay, as long as what you wrote was for you, then it makes more sense. I was just saying that if you were trying to get some sort of positive response from them, then it was the wrong way to go about it. If you were doing it as sort of a personal "monkey off your back" then it makes perfect sense.

I do see one major flaw with this whole thing though. You are saying money is "no longer a finish line" and that you are "leaving a positive footprint." That sounds great, but money is a necessity. I know you know this because you have to pay for your medical bills with money. It sucks, but you need money to survive, so in a sense it's a mandatory finish line in a race we all have to run.

You are correct that actions speak louder than words, but you must also look at your own actions if you are going to call out other people. I don't know exactly what happened with the business to get you to the point where you are at, but there are quite a few people who are owed money for either work they've done for you, materials they provided to you or money they've lent you (CC Companies). I can assure you, since they've contacted me, that they don't care what kind of "positive footprint" you are trying to leave...they want what they are owed.

I realize you are now trying to make a real difference and that is great, but I think that before you take on the world you should be focusing on fixing the problems you left behind in Orange County. Although I'd really like to get paid back and have you take back this credit card bill, I'm not just talking about myself. There were a lot of people depending on you when you skipped town. A lot of people were hung out to dry. I know it's easier to ignore all of that and in its place put a nice distraction like fighting an evil corporation like DeBeers, but somewhere deep down I'm sure you realize that you should be focused on making things right and not solely focused on these political issues. If I am sounding harsh, that is not my intention, but I think this is an important message that you need to hear.

So you know, I will go and read the two chapters of the Diamond Invention that you mentioned. What I read a while back was very intriguing and I'm interested in learning more about it. I will let you know my opinion once I have had a chance to read them.

I'm glad you are focused on your health and eating better. I'll throw it out there again...I'd be happy to provide you with some Vemma for FREE...no strings attached. I just talked to another person about a month ago who has Crohn's Disease and no longer has any negative symptoms since taking it. If you are really focused on staying healthy you'll take me up on my offer. So you know, we have some Vemma that is nearing its expiration date and we're not going to be able to use it in time, so it really is not an issue to give you some free product. I don't want you worrying about it being a hand-out or owing me something. It either goes to you or we'll have to toss it.

I hope you are able to keep your job. It sounds like it could be pretty good. From what you've implied and from what Jay has told me, it sounds like you do have a goal of paying everyone back. I hope that is still your goal and that this job allows you to do that.

You can chose whether to participate in a conversation or ignore the stuff that you don't want to discuss.

The good it did was for me not for them. I was lying to myself by keeping their secrets, and I am not just referring to my dad's side of the family because I did this with everyone. Losing everything made me realize what was important. After seeing money doing nothing to improve the character of my family, I realized that money was no longer a finish line for me. I decided that leaving a positive footprint was more important. I believe shame is a much more powerful deterrent than anything else. My family and most people, are use to getting away with talking their way out of problems. Those emails were private within the family before they were public. They went public because I caught my dad and uncle being hypocrites, lying, and contradicting themselves. I no longer believe peoples words, I make my opinion based upon their actions. A week or two before my dad wrote me and said that he didn't want me in his life, he had written me saying that he would always love me. ? Now I know that my dad's most recent email was sent out of hurt and was an emotional response, but I also know that if he truly loved me, he would have not had his mother and pedophile step-father over for Thanksgiving. And I don't know about you, but it takes some balls to commit credit card fraud with your kids name and then offer any advice about anything; when a persons actions don't support their words, you know they are not being honest.

I realized that I was lying to myself and being a different person for everyone depending on what they wanted from me. I hated seeing my aunt vicki and uncle gary and that clan because they were so judgmental. It is a bad way to live, and now that I confronted them, I feel like I have created my own identity that is completely dependent of what they are anyone else thinks.

Despite looking bad on paper, I have never felt better about myself.

I know it sounds like a big change from who you knew. but a lot can happen in a short period of time.

I would suggest making some time read CH9 CH18 of the Diamond Invention; you will realize that you need to go further down the rabbit hole beyond the real estate market which is a symptom, and look at what currency is suppose to be then look at the US$ and then think about the buying power of an unregulated currency that is immune to inflation and provides them the ability to go into any market and under price their competition since money is no object.

Monopolies are pretty important. Lets take Microsoft for example. By monopolizing the Operating System market they could manufacture the hardware that works with the OS, then they could make the equipment that makes the hardware, then they could make the shipping company that exclusively ships their exclusive OS and exclusive hardware. there is no limit to expanding into every market, once any market is dominated.

By De Beers monopolizing diamonds, they have indirectly controlled every industry that relies on diamonds. All the oil in the Mideast would be inaccessible and worthless without diamond drilling bits. And then you also have the necessity of industrial diamonds for construction as well as mass production of military machinery.

The collapse of our currency is due to the erosion that De Beers has afforded by systemically reaching every market.

I don't know if I told you this or not, but my uncle Pete's plastic bag business (commandpackaging.com) had a silent South African partner during the late 80s during the South African Apartheid and a time when it was illegal to take money out of the country. So basically my uncle laundered money that was earned from slave wages under a slave government.

One more thing to consider... undoubtedly you saw the movie Blood Diamond and you saw that weapons were bought with diamonds and guns put in the hands of children. Well, if you expand on that... let me give you a scenario... gold is discovered in a country, De Beers approaches the government and says we will setup the mining operation necessary to remove the gold from the earth, and in exchange, we will give you 10%. The government agrees, De Beers sets up then De Beers supplies diamond currency to the opposition to the government which creates a civil war. During the civil war, De Beers gets limited scrutiny by the government and doesn't have to worry about the war spilling into their mining operation since both sides realize that they need De Beers for either mining revenue in the case of the government or diamonds in the case of the opposition... and there is always opposition willing to accept funding for a war.

It is much deeper than this, but I don't want to waste my breath if you are not interested. I do think that you will understand the significance of Harry Oppenheimer meeting with President-elect JFK in NY at the Carlyle Hotel. Something made even more significant when you consider the Harry Oppenheimer and all De Beers executives were considered criminals of the United States for supplying industrial diamonds to the Nazi's during WWII.

For kicks do a google search on "Dr. Ruth Sniper" and you will find some pretty interesting info on Dr. Ruth being a sniper for the Haganah aka Jewish Underground. Gary's mother was a close colleague of Dr. Ruth.

There are a lot of things up in the air with my job. I do reserve studies which are required inspections for HOA and commercial properties. There is a civil code that requires a site inspection every three years and a financial update every year. I go to the properties inspect the exterior and capital maintenance and then create a report that explains the life expectancy and how much it will cost to maintain. This lets the owners know how much to budget for the future.

Business was real slow over the holidays and although it is picking up he is unsure if he can keep me on. I will know in the next two weeks where things are at. It is commission based and has the potential to be very lucrative but with the economy who knows.

I have no health insurance so my meds are expensive and I am not getting the infusion as I should be. I use to get them every 2 months and the last one I got was in August or Sept. Its not fun, but I am eating healthier and exercising and that seems to help. I am spending a lot on meds which is severely limiting my money.

Hey man,

I'd really rather not get into a drawn out political discussion. You asked me to critique the site and I did. I'll answer a few more questions, but I don't want this to go where I see it heading.

As far as the email correspondence, I'm not sure what good it could possibly do. I see only negatives from calling people out in a public fashion. It's not the way to get people to agree with you or to confess their evil ways. Accusations simply put people on the defensive, no matter what... even if the accusations are true. Now, as far as the accusations, all of the accusations I know anything about seem to follow what I've always been told, so I'd say they are probably pretty accurate. Some I have never heard and have no idea about them. I just think that going that route can only cause the people accused to cut off contact with you. If that's one of the goals, then fine... but if you are trying to convince them to join you or listen to you then it is a bad move.

As far as anti-trust laws and the sherman act, you know me well enough to know I have no clue about those. I was not the greatest student. haha I do know that monopolies have very few redeeming qualities and in the end, hurt both the consumer and the workers involved with the company. I've read enough of that online book about diamonds that you told me about a while back to know that DeBeers is shady as hell and is basically a criminal organization. I also realize it's not a fight I care to fight.

As far as the economic downturn, I think we should have seen it coming. The housing boom couldn't last forever. I also think that we'll survive and have another upswing in the next few years. I think confidence in "America" plays a much bigger role in our economy than people are willing to admit and I think that our confidence in America will be determined by who wins the election... no matter what his or her politics are. I've seen both sides of the coin with how the economy is. I've seen a drop in demand for housing and building...so less work, but I've also seen an increase in people looking for hope and other ways to make money (Vemma). My business there has gone way up while my other business has had a drop off. So, for me personally, it's been good and bad, but I'm confident that we'll be fine. I have no solid evidence to point to that shows we'll come back quickly... I just have confidence in America.

I hope that answers your questions.

Now, as far as the credit card, I'm paying it, but I'd like to stop paying it as soon as possible. I am looking to get a truck for work and this extra payment is what's keeping me from doing that. I'm basically making a car payment for the credit card instead of for a truck. So, I know you needed to get your health care stuff in order. Do you know about how long it will take to do that and take over the payments on the credit card? I'm already out over a grand on this card. Let me know.

By the way, what exactly are you doing now? I know you got a job, but what are you doing? Are you back working with computers? And how is your health? You never responded to that part before.

Talk to you soon,

Dave

Dave,

Thank you for the feedback, I am actually working on a summary for the homepage.

I find it odd however that after knowing me for 15 years and knowing my Dad for nearly as long, all you have to say in reference to me calling out my father for being a hypocrite and liar is that it takes credibility away from the site. How can you imply that it takes credibility away from the site when you don't know the purpose of the site?

Can I get your thoughts on the email correspondence with my family? Not what you think I want to hear, but what you honestly thought when you read it.

Can I also get your opinion based upon your knowledge of the Sherman Act and Anti-trust laws as you learned in business school of the possible affect that a monopoly can have on an economic model?

And finally, what about this "economic down cycle" gives you any indication that there is a path of recovery for the US economy?

No time to "shit chat[sic]", gotta run!

Adam,

Hopes things are going alright.

Sorry, it's taken me a while to get around to this, but I have been swamped and out of town (Vemma convention in Vegas...friggin' awesome, by the way).

Okay, so I had some time to read through the website. The main thing that comes to mind is that the website and blogs/essays seem to be all over the place. Each item is very hard to follow because there is so much jumping around. Also, what exactly is the website about? There isn't a clear point to the website to either support or go against. It just seems like there is a laundry list of items that you guys are railing against, but without specifying the point it kind of loses any momentum. The home page says the website is "not about blood diamonds", but that is clearly a big issue on the site. A lot of times it just seems likes paragraphs are actually cut and pasted together from different essays.

So, it's hard to understand and therefore hard to take the facts thrown out as seriously as you probably want people to take them. If it were done in a more organized and clear manner and without some of the rude comments/essays, like the family stuff, you would probably be able to pull in some consistent readers. To prove this point, I sent a couple of my friends to the site and later asked them what it was about... they said they weren't sure, but it was about "politics and blood diamonds", but that was as specific as they could get. They were confused and nothing grabbed their attention enough to get them to read through everything carefully.

I hope that answers your question. I'll send you some more info on the CC stuff... I've gotten more calls from other people looking for you. I have to get some work done right now, but I'll get back to you on that stuff later.
